

Preparing to Send A Child with OI to School

Can my child with OI attend regular school?

Children with OI, all types, usually have normal to above-average intelligence, and typically participate in a regular curriculum. Instructional and physical environment modifications may be required for safety and to promote independence. Some children with OI benefit from assistive technology devices for energy conservation such as lightweight writing instruments, pencil grips and adaptive scissors.

Teach all staff that children with OI are capable of functioning at grade level. Their small physical stature is not to be mistaken for immaturity. They must be treated the same as their peers. They should be held accountable to all school rules and standards of behavior.

How can I make starting school easier?

Before the first day of school, you and your child should meet with all staff who will work with your child. This allows you to familiarize the staff with your child's individual strengths and needs and helps your child feel comfortable in the school building. Discussing your child's abilities will ensure more independence in school and minimize everyone's initial fears or apprehensions. Discuss privacy and agree on what will be said about your child's OI in front of peers. Consider volunteering to talk to the class about OI. Discuss the best way classroom staff should communicate with you. Everyone who interacts with your child should be knowledgeable about handling day-to-day activities and emergencies.

What other areas should be discussed with school staff?

You may want to discuss the following topics:

- What to do when a fracture occurs at school
- Limitations on mobility
- Use of a personal aide
- The physical environment
- Adaptive seating in the classroom; for example a foot stool may be needed with the desk chair
- Wheelchair/walker use
- Toileting
- Moving between classes
- Fire emergency plans
- Transportation
- Home study – when and if it is needed

How can the school help?

The school nurse needs to be aware of how to assist your child and how you wish emergencies to be handled. The nurse's office can be a safe place for a child to take a break from sitting in a wheelchair at scheduled times during the day.

Physical and occupational therapists who are employed by the school system can provide services to help the child with OI have better access to the total learning environment. This can include adapting the PE program, providing safe activities during recess, locating adaptive sports programs, or therapy to improve basic motor skills.

This article was excerpted from the Teacher's Guide in Jason's First Day!

This fact sheet was reprinted from the Winter 2005 issue of the OI Foundation newsletter Breakthrough.