Brand Story

Four hundred years of spending time amidst the grapevines and experiencing passion for wine. Indeed, in the Adige River Valley the history of my family and that of winemaking have been united for a long time. It all started way back on December 7th, 1607, when Domenico Armani signed notarized papers (which are still in the historical archives of Trent) documenting the fact that his father Simone bequeathed the land to him, lands covered with "trees and grapevines".

Points of Distinction

- Armani family's tradition in the Adige River Valley dates back over 400 years.
- Veneto is protected from the harsher climate by the Alps.
- The cooler climates provide the ideal setting for the white varietals, while the warmer coastal plains and river valleys produce the renowned reds.
- Why to Buy: A step up in quality from the best-selling Prosecco.

Review

Veneto, Italy - "This wine offers aromas of spring blossom, white stone-fruit flesh and a hint of wet stone. The creamy, refreshing palate brings white peach, Golden Delicious apple and candied tangerine before a white-almond close."
